

CAPITOL SEARCH LIGHT

“It’s perfect” she said walking straight over.

“Intriguing” said her friend who stood to the side, “But what is it?”

“It’s a search light!” she smiled and signaled the sales clerk her interest.

“A search light?” her friend laughed. “I’ve never seen anything like it!”

“Well, you shop at the wrong stores. Can’t go to a big box for this. This is one of a kind.”

“Yes, but look at the quality. It’s magnificent! The lines, the detail, the Parabolic Reflector...just like the ones on the Capitol Ships.”

“Capitol Ships? How do you know such things?”

“John and I collect, so of course, it must be rare and unique,” she winked at her friend. “We’re connoisseurs, you know.”

And her friend had to agree. It was unusual, strong, and prominent, reminiscent of a former time. “It’s rather industrial, don’t you say...in a classy sort of way?”

“It’s positively elegant”

“Do you think John will like it?”

“John?” She ran her hands over the smooth, rounded metal, picturing it her living room, her study, the den... “Oh no, my friend, this isn’t for John, this one’s for me.”
